Football in Burundi

As in most African countries, football is the national sport in Burundi. Founded in 1948 and a member of FIFA since 1972, the association is well organised and takes an active part in football, sending representative teams in all age categories to both men's and women's FIFA competitions. Although one of the poorest countries in the world, it still manages to organise football well despite a lack of funds. Ms Lydia Nsekera is one of only three female association presidents in the FIFA family and ensures that the population of Burundi are given the opportunity to experience joy and emotions, despite the ravages of war, and momentarily to forget the deprivation that is the order of the day in other countries.

Burundi is not one of the football powerhouses on the African continent. However, the country is ranked halfway down the African table and has already produced several players who made a name for themselves in Europe or who are still playing (Omar Mussa, Pierre Mazangala, David Opango). It has a mine of young talent who are bent on following their predecessors' example.

The first Goal Project

At its meeting on 22 September 2004, the Goal/Bureau gave the go-ahead to the Burundi association to submit a draft project for association headquarters in Bujumbura. The building will be erected next to the Prince Luis Rwadasore national stadium, for which the government has promised to donate the land. The budget will keep within the limits of the donation from Goal and, at the time of the award, work was expected to start in August 2005.

Second Goal project

Even before its new headquarters, whose construction had been approved in September 2004, could be officially opened, the Burundi football association had already submitted plans for another project. The envisioned national training centre in Bujumbura will enable the association to run training programmes, especially for young players. The Goal Bureau gave the project the go-ahead on 21 March 2007 and the Burundi government has agreed to donate the required plot of land.

Women's football

When, in 1995, today's FIFA President said "The future of football is feminine", it was more than mere lip service. It reflected a strong belief in the huge potential that women's football has to develop. Ever since, FIFA has given targeted support for the efforts of associations who offer women the same opportunities to develop as male players. Launched in 1998, FIFA's Financial Assistance Programme (FAP) introduced a requirement in 2004 for the associations and confederations to invest at least 4% of their FAP funding into women's football. This threshold was increased to 10% in 2005. On top of this commitment, FIFA also promotes the women's game in more general ways by directly financing women's matches and organising competitions and symposiums. Thanks to its development programmes, FIFA is also playing an active role in the training of administrators, coaches, referees and sports doctors.

Win in Africa with Africa

Under this motto, FIFA is seeking to use football pointedly as a development tool. At the same time, the governing body is aiming to focus attention on Africa in the build-up to the 2010 FIFA World Cup™ and project a positive image of a continent that is working hard for its own development.. The Win in Africa with Africa campaign was endorsed by the FIFA Congress in Marrakesh and assigned a USD 70 million budget by the Congress in Munich.

At its heart lies the initiative to provide every African nation with an international-standard artificial turf pitch. The remainder of the eight-point programme is intended to develop domestic competitions, train African sports executives, promote sports medicine and address topical issues relating to the FIFA World Cup™ in South Africa.
